

Frequently Asked Questions about Demonic Confidence

Over the past few weeks, since I announced the upcoming release of Demonic Confidence, I've been getting a lot of the same questions from several people. So, instead of answering all of them one by one, I thought it'd be better to put them in a FAQ.

If you have any questions that aren't addressed here, drop me a line at lucas@demonicconfidence.com.

Question 1: Does the name have any significance? That is, will this product offend my religious sensibilities?

Absolutely not. The word "demonic" is only used as an adjective. I use the word to connote a sense of a fiercely energetic Confidence and Power. While there are only a few people who've raised this question, those who have used the system understand Demonic Confidence has nothing in it that would offend any religious beliefs.

Demonic Confidence is more about exorcising your personal demons, the ones that keep you from living the life you want.

Question 2: The system is meant to change you in just 3 weeks. But can you take longer than 21 days?

When this product was first released, the answer to that question was "no". If you missed a day, for whatever reason, you had to start from the beginning.

But, over the past few years, I've realized that circumstances can make it difficult for even the most disciplined student to go through the system in one go. Emergencies arise, events beyond our control can force us to miss a day.

With this release, I've changed that. I've decided to include a stasis module, what to do in the event that you cannot complete a set of exercises on a particular day.

This new addition to Demonic Confidence is also useful for the exercises that you fail to complete, or have to work up the courage to break through.

I'm releasing the stasis module with one big warning. I know some will heed it, but a few will not. Here it is, nonetheless.

A person who takes 42 days or 63 days to complete Demonic Confidence will be just as confident as one who takes 21 days provided he has legitimate reason not to advance.

If work is keeping you from doing exercises, that's one thing. If you're watching any TV or doing anything recreational when you could be doing your exercises, your confidence levels will be affected.

It's not that you have to prove yourself to me. Your subconscious will know when you're half-heartedly trying to change. It will give you results in direct proportion to your efforts.

Question 3: Can you take less than 21 days?

Unfortunately, no. Not unless you're doing a one-on-one session or two with a well-trained hypnotist.

In this world of instant gratification, everyone wants everything to happen right away.

It's just that your subconscious doesn't think that way. It took years to develop a habit: 3 weeks is about the shortest time to undevelop it.

Shy away from any product that promises to take less than 2 weeks (and even that's pushing it). Outside of hypnosis (which replaces a behavior with a new one without the subconscious even realizing anything has changed), fast equals temporary.

Any behavior modification programs that promise change in under two weeks will most likely have to be repeated every 3-6 months.

Demonic Confidence is actually a twenty-eight day course. There is one week at the beginning for preparations. It's not part of the daily routine and is very flexible. The main course itself is 21 days that you can spread out over time, plus one week of simple mental preparation and set-up.

Question 4: How does this system differ from the one that Archer Sloan released a few years ago?

The product that I released originally with Archer was meant to be done in 21 days. No more, no less. As I've stated in the answer to Question 2, I've given that the flexibility it deserves. The stasis module didn't exist in the original version we put out in 2003. The results will be the same as long as you don't abuse it and take days off, just for fun.

The preparatory week has been added, and some of the material has also changed. This is for those that know what's coming. Some of the power in the structure of Demonic Confidence is that you're not supposed to know what comes next in the system. The technology works best when you keep your subconscious in the dark.

Unfortunately, there are a lot of people that sneaked a peek, or read about the exercises online. This drastically diminishes the efficacy of the system. If you're one of the people who knows what each day's exercises are meant to be, it's imperative for you to get a fresh start.

The basics of the system haven't changed. Some of the exercises have, in very profound ways, but the foundation has not. That's because human psychology doesn't change.

The emphasis on the subconscious in this version is substantial, far more than we addressed the first time around.

I hope that clears up any questions you may have about this release. If you have any questions that aren't addressed here, drop me a line at lucas@demonicconfidence.com.
